Management of Human Resources

From legal regulations and administration, to workforce operations and professional development, it's YOU who will manage the policies, processes, and most importantly – the people.

At Bellevue University, our Bachelor of Science in Management of Human Resources will provide you a strong foundation of professional skills for both private and public sector jobs.

To ensure you're best prepared to hit the ground running in any human resources department, our curriculum focuses heavily on the supervision of human capital, and the know-how associated with human resource planning and analysis.

And, through our collaborative learning techniques, you'll master concepts such as Equal Employment Opportunity compliance, staffing, compensation and benefits, and employee management relations.

Our Management of Human Resources degree is based on and fully aligns with the Society for Human Resources Management HR Curriculum Guidebook and Templates, the common body of knowledge developed by SHRM (pronounced "sherm" for the vo talent) to define areas that you should study as an HR undergrad student.

What's more, you'll work with faculty who have direct experience in the industry of human resources, making your transition from the classroom to the office that much more comfortable -- and applicable.

Get ready to confidently enter the world of HR with the Bellevue University Bachelor of Science in Management of Human Resources.
